

CPT Practice Test Questions and Answers

1. The Nabers probe (furcation probe) is used to:

- A) Measure sulcus depth
- B) Assess furcation involvement and horizontal bone loss between roots
- C) Scale calculus from furcations
- D) Deliver subgingival irrigation

2. Horizontal bone loss on a radiograph indicates:

- A) Localized aggressive periodontitis pattern
- B) Even bone resorption affecting multiple teeth at a similar level
- C) Vertical defect pattern
- D) Furcation involvement only

3. Smoking affects periodontal disease outcomes by:

- A) Reducing plaque accumulation on teeth
- B) Masking clinical signs of inflammation while worsening bone loss
- C) Improving the host immune response
- D) Reducing probing pocket depth measurements

4. What is the function of gingival crevicular fluid?

- A) To aid in the formation of enamel.
- B) To lubricate the gums.
- C) To cleanse periodontal tissues and prevent infection
- D) To form bone.

Answers: 1-B 2-B 3-B 4-C

For More CPT Questions and Answers FREE, CPT Online Prep Training,
CPT Exam, CPT Study Guide, CPT Flashcards, CPT Quizzes visit:

CPT Practice Test